REQUEST	15996	RESPONSE

I am interested in existing policies relating to countering terrorism and extremism.

In particular, how far-right extremism is countered by the organisation, with particular regard to potentially radicalising material/material that is linked to or may be considered to promote extremist ideologies

A

1. What training courses or training sessions, either delivered by internal or external instructors, do staff typically complete with regard to the issue of terrorism extremism? Are there mandatory courses?

   Or, if there is no typical framework for courses: what courses have been delivered on this subject in the past 12 months up to date?

   We have an e-learning module called Act which is available to everyone and required to be completed by all Frontline staff, contact centres, control and reception staff.

2. If possible, can you please provide copies of the training material delivered in these sessions/courses: any slides, booklets etc ?

   As it is an E-Learning package that we have commissioned we do not hold the materials, there are no separate slides, handouts, workbooks

B

1. What training material or material for guidance is currently held for staff?   For example, is there a permanent staff handbook on spotting and dealing with signs of extremism?

   We have an e-learning Module called Prevent Duty, which is a Core Learning Module

2. Could you please provide copies of any such material

   As it is an E-Learning package that we have commissioned we do not hold the materials, there are no separate slides, handouts, workbooks

C

1. Could you please provide any lists or summaries of material that has been deemed, in any guidance provided to staff, to be connected to extremist ideologies, or to promote these ideologies.

I am particular interested in material relate: philosophy, arts, literature, film, and music

For example, staff may be warned that Nietzsche books could be linked to extremists, as he may be favoured by groups with an extremist ideology.

We do not provide materials of this nature